5,000 units up for short-term rentals

HOUSING MARKET

Majority listed through Airbnb, analysis finds

Sam Smith
For Metro | Vancouver

While Vancouver sits at a low 0.6 per cent long-term rental vacancy rate, independent analysis of the rental market gathered over the past year has found more than 5,000 units listed as short-term rentals, of which 85 per cent are listed through Airbnb.

This is a problem, according to Coun. Geoff Meggs, particularly as the rising public discourse of affordable housing becomes more and more prominent.

"I'm concerned, but not surprised," Meggs told Metro on Sunday. "The number of short-term rentals is skyrocketing and undoubtedly having an impact on our long-term rental stock."

Currently, 75 per cent of short-term rentals are listed as full-sized homes, condos, or apartments. Airbnb also released a report recently stating its listings have doubled every year since 2013.

The city is expected to report the findings to council with full results of the research and recommendations on regulation of short-term rentals in the fall. The recommendations are aimed to support the city's Rental 100 program, which encourages developers to make buildings comprising 100 per cent rental units by providing incentives such as relaxed unit sizes, increased density, and the waiving of the development cost levy. This was put in place to help create 5,000 rental units by 2021.

Before then, they are opening a public opinion survey beginning July 20 at vancouver.ca/short-term-rentals.

"It's not about prohibition," Meggs said. "It's about making sure there's compliance of other rules, like protection of long-term rentals."

Personally, he takes issue with how the sites allow people to sign-up and list their property for rent, which he counts as conducting a business and therefore each lister should carry a business licence.

"I hear those who say, 'This is nasty to me. I just want to make a little bit of money,'" Meggs said. "That's fine, but you're in business though, and when you're in business you have to follow certain rules."

'War resister' Rodney Watson hopeful after bond offered

IRAQ CONFLICT

U.S. vet has lived in church for 7 years avoiding deportation

David P. Ball
Metro | Vancouver

Rodney Watson is fed up hiding in plain sight in Vancouver.

The 38-year-old U.S. army veteran has spent nearly seven years holed up in a Downtown Eastside church after refusing to return for a second tour of Iraq. There is a standing deportation order to return him to a likely court martial in his country.

"I'm tired of sitting here exposing myself like this," he told reporters at a press conference inside First United Church on Saturday. "But I'd do it in a heartbeat again for my son."

His Vancouver-born son, Jordan, 7, lives with his Canadian mother, and can only see his father by visiting the church.

But Watson believes he's closer than ever to re-joining his family. That's because a local resident has come forward with an offer to post funds as a guarantee should Watson be permitted to leave his church sanctuary, according to the New Democratic Party's immigration critic.

"We found an individual in the community willing to provide a financial bond as well as a performance bond for Rodney," Vancouver East MP Jenny Kwan said of the individual, who was not identified to reporters. "We will meet the conditions the government sets for Rodney to report back to whomever they deem appropriate, until the final issue of his status is resolved."

On Saturday, she issued a letter co-signed by other NDP MPs in the province, urging the federal Liberal government to fulfil previous promises to let Iraq war resisters like Watson stay in Canada.

The call came just days after a withering U.K. government report found the 2003 Iraq invasion was based on "flawed information" that exaggerated Saddam Hussein's threat, was rushed before other peaceful options were tried, and ignored warnings it would likely set off years of violence and instability.

Those warnings came true: Iraq has descended into a bloody civil war claiming hundreds of thousands of Iraqi civilian lives, and spawned the Daesh terrorist army.

"Sept. 11 was one of the main reasons why I joined the military.... I followed my patriotic duty to take part in this war," Watson said, "which I found out later was an unjust war based on lies."

He still dreams he can one day take his son to walk around Stanley Park, and take in a B.C. Lions football game together. Watson addressed his request for "humanitarian and compassionate" consideration directly to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau.

"I'm pleading with you ... to do the right thing and allow me to be free to be with my Canadian-born son — to be a part of his life, to be a great help, a great father, a great role model. I want to be a positive member of society."

I followed my patriotic duty to take part in this war, which I found out later was an unjust war based on lies.

Spike in overdoses: RCMP

SURREY

Police urge precautions when taking illicit drugs

Officials in Surrey are warning people about potent illicit drugs after a jump in overdoses.

The Fraser Health authority said Saturday afternoon that there have been 20 reported overdoses in less than 24 hours.

None of the patients have died, but two people have been admitted to hospital.

"It is especially disturbing when we see such a large number of overdoses in a short period of time, and even more concerning when it requires significant amounts of naloxone to reverse them," Chief Medical Health Officer Dr. Victoria Lee said in a statement.

"Our message to people who use drugs is that there appears to be more lethal drug supply that is circulating."

The patients are being tested to determine what substances are behind the overdoses.

The health authority is working with the RCMP in the area where many of the overdoses originated, warning people about the increase in overdoses and encouraging them to take precautions if they're using illicit drugs.

Police officers and other first responders are also taking extra precautions, said Asst. Commissioner Bill Fordy with the Surrey RCMP.

"Drugs can also be cross-contaminated with these other products, which means even non-opiate users may succumb to an overdose," he said.

News about the string of overdoses comes just days after the British Columbia coroner's office released statistics showing there has been a spike in fatal overdoses this year.

Statistics from the coroner's service show there were 371 deaths in the first six months of 2016, about a 74 per cent increase compared with the same period last year.

The Fraser Valley, which includes Surrey, had the highest death count at 114.

The coroners service said toxicology tests determined fentanyl was linked to about 60 per cent of the deaths, and was either used alone or in combination with other drugs.

CRIME

Two dead in likely murder-suicide

Police say the deaths of two women in Coquitlam appear to be a murder-suicide.

RCMP say officers responded to a call about a woman in medical distress in the 1100 block of Eagleridge Drive Friday evening.

The 22-year-old woman was pronounced dead at the scene, and police say her injuries suggest foul play.

A female suspect who knew the victim was identified, but left the scene before police arrived.

Officers tracked the suspect's vehicle to Buntzen Lake on Saturday morning, where police say the suspect's body was found in the water early Saturday morning.

Staff Sgt. Jennifer Pound with the Integrated Homicide Investigations Team says evidence suggests both deaths are part of a murder-suicide, but there is still work to be done on the case.

Pokemon Go outside and play, say app's fan base

Sam Smith
For Metro | Vancouver

Pokemon Go has officially launched in Canada, allowing anyone around the country to download and play Nintendo's massively popular smartphone game.

> I think I've gone out this week and a half more than I have ever gone out in the last few months.
> Gabriel Lam

But while would-be trainers had to patiently wait for servers to get back online following the flood of users attempting to log on at the same time, those who have been playing unofficially the past several days have already seen health benefits they say no other game has offered them.

"Very honestly, with this app out, I think I've gone out this week and a half more than I have ever gone out in the last few months," said Gabriel Lam.

Lam is helping co-ordinate a Pokemon Go meetup in Stanley Park on July 23, which has already drawn thousands of people to their Facebook event page with more than 1,400 confirmed going and 4,500 interested.

The massive positive feedback came as a surprise to Lam, but after playing the game himself he understands the appeal.

"I thought it was a great idea because honestly speaking, this app as you said really does push people to go out now," he said. "I think it's a great way to meet new people, make new friends, and just also do some sightseeing."

230
The number of city parks in Vancouver, any number of which may conceal wild Pokemon.

The app itself encourages players to go outside and walk around neighbourhoods, as the more people walk the more they will encounter wild Pokemon to capture, different PokeStops to visit (which can be interesting landmarks such as the Gastown Steam clock, and drop helpful in-game items), and incubate Pokemon Eggs every five kilometres. Players can purchase the Poke Lure Module, which increases the likelihood of Pokemon and items to show up in areas they're placed.

People have placed lures at certain stops, including at the halfway and three-quarter marks of the Grouse Grind to encourage players to not only have fun with the game, but get exercise at the same time.

"We don't get that many months of sunshine in the summer, so anything that gets people more active, I think it's positive," said Sarah Kirby-Yung, commissioner of the Vancouver Parks Board.

There are 230 parks for people to check out, Kirby-Yung said, and she hopes to see the game and its players to visit these areas. She herself said she would be downloading and trying the game soon.

Low incomes seem connected with high-value homes: Study

Jen St. Denis
Metro | Vancouver

An unusually high number of Vancouver homeowners living in multimillion-dollar neighbourhoods but reporting poverty-level incomes is a red flag that needs immediate government action, says NDP MLA David Eby.

"The focus should be quite straightforward: Are you paying your worldwide taxes inside British Columbia, or not?" Eby, who represents Vancouver-Point Grey, told reporters during a press conference on Friday.

"If you're not, you should have to pay extra in order to pay for the public services that make this real estate so valuable: the environmental controls, the policing, the court system, the schools and the health care."

Eby is basing his call to action on data analysis by Jens von Bergmann, a mathematician and owner of a data analytics firm who recently mapped home ownership to income levels. The exercise highlighted just how much Vancouver differs from other Canadian cities, he said.

"Census data all the way back to 2006 and 2011 shows that in Metro Vancouver and in particular in some of the inner Vancouver areas, the relationship that one usually sees between … the value of housing, and income and poverty levels, is quite different from other municipalities," von Bergmann said.

> I cannot say this is foreign money, and I cannot say this is moving the real estate market.
> Jens von Bergmann, mathematician

To further narrow down the phenomenon, von Bergmann looked at only homeowners, removing all tenant households, and then did a separate analysis that included only the 18-64 age group because senior and child poverty can skew results for some areas. Each analysis revealed an unusually high number of households reporting incomes lower than would be required to cover their housing costs.

"(The phenomenon) is big enough that is in my opinion concerning and should be monitored to understand what is going on," said von Bergmann.

Von Bergmann emphasized that his data should not be interpreted as showing that Vancouver is full of tax cheats, but it does warrant further study.

"I cannot say this is foreign money, and I cannot say this is moving the real estate market," he further cautioned.

"I think it is important, in order to make good policy decisions, for the (B.C.) government to step forward and link real estate transaction data to tax data to get a much clearer picture of the size of this."

The B.C. government recently began tracking citizenship information for property purchasers, a move Eby previously criticized as being voluntary and thus inaccurate. Eby says tracking citizenship is the wrong approach.

He outlined three actions he would like the B.C. government to take: Appoint a task force of auditors and other experts to look into the low-income anomaly; pressure the federal government to hire more Canada Revenue Agency auditors; and pass "some form" of a proposal put forward by a group of Vancouver economists to levy a higher property tax on homeowners who do not make their income in Canada.

Work should be done to determine whether a substantial number of people are evading tax, as well as whether there are legal tax gaps that should be closed, Eby said.

B.C. legislators will soon head back to Victoria for a summer session of the legislature, where government will introduce a bill to enable the City of Vancouver to tax empty homes.

BLACK LIVES MATTER

Group calls on city's force to withdraw float in 'solidarity'

Black Lives Matter Vancouver is asking police to voluntarily withdraw their float from the upcoming Pride Parade, as a "show of solidarity and understanding" that officer involvement in the march creates an unsafe atmosphere for some communities.

The open letter published by the activist group on Friday comes weeks after its Toronto counterparts halted the city's parade until organizers signed off on a list of demands including banning police floats from future marches.

The Vancouver chapter said it stands with Black Lives Matter Toronto in its discontent with police marching in the parade.

While having police on the ground to perform a civil service is understandable, allowing officers to participate on a float is "insulting" to protesters who made Pride celebrations possible, it said.

"We acknowledge that in certain contexts police presence to perform a job of civil service may deter acts of homophobia and violence, especially at designated queer events such as Pride," the letter said.

"However, we cannot divorce the policing institution from its historical and continued violence against Indigenous and (minority) communities, racial profiling, or inaction around our missing Indigenous women."

> We protect the rights of all those who live, work and play in the city.
> Sgt. Randy Fincham

Instead, the group proposes a public service float, including police officers, firefighters, paramedics and others, to replace the police-only float. The float would no longer represent an institution that has perpetuated "structural violence against Black and brown bodies in North America," it said.

The Vancouver group said it will not take part in the Pride Parade on July 31, by participation or protest, as an act of solidarity with other Black Lives Matter chapters and because Pride no longer represents "community action, resistance and revolution."

Instead, the chapter said it has accepted an invitation from the Dyke March to lead that parade as Grand Marshall.

Sexism cited as barrier in local politics

EQUALITY

Study finds just 23% of local elected leaders are women

Halena Seiferling imagined that, of all political realms, the municipal level would be where women were most represented — in mayors' offices and city council seats across Canada.

None of that onerous travel to and from legislative capitals. The absence of party systems and the partisan vitriol to which they are prone. Issues, from speed bumps to public libraries, closest to neighbourhoods and home.

"People assume that the municipal level is just inherently more accessible for women or more welcoming," the 26-year-old Regina native told Torstar News Service. However, "based on the numbers in Canada, that's not reflected."

Seiferling, who led a study at Simon Fraser University for her master's degree in public policy, found that while Canadian women have been legally able to run for political office for almost a century, they "remain severely under-represented at all levels."

As of 2015, she said, women comprised 26 per cent of legislators at the federal level, 25.7 per cent provincially, and just 23 per cent in municipal governments.

The issue, she found, is not voter behaviour or gender bias. Canadians have shown they will vote for women. The problem, she said, is there are "too few women running for municipal offices in Canada."

And the chief reason for that, she said, is "persistent sexism."

REPORT

Seiferling's report recommends:

- Mentorship programs for young women, pairing them with city councillors.
- Campaign finance reform to level the playing field.
- Direct provision of campaign funds to women.

Negative attitudes, sexist comments, and obsession with women's age, appearance and communication styles continue to prevail, Seiferling was told by women who have been elected mayor or city councillor.

To help in the challenge of changing culture, Seiferling adopted Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's decision to apply gender parity in appointing his federal cabinet, recommending that municipalities mandate gender equity for all advisory committees and boards.

Such a measure would address "the biggest barrier identified in my research — that of the unwelcoming political culture," she said.

It would ensure that "more women are present in municipal decision-making spaces, which will begin to shift the political culture," she wrote. And it would build skills and experience in women that would likely lead to the confidence, networks and support necessary to pursuing elected positions.

"Having more women involved in municipal decision-making spaces, before they even have to be elected, then hopefully the political culture would change a bit more quickly."

AUGMENTED REALITY

Catch 'em all, Canada

Prospective Pokémon trainers can officially download the mobile gaming sensation Pokémon Go in Canada as of Sunday afternoon.

The augmented-reality game launched in the United States, Australia, New Zealand and Japan earlier this month.

But before Sunday, Canadians had to find workarounds to play the game north of the 49th parallel.

The game sends players into the real world to search for the mythical digital pocket monsters known as Pokémon, who appear on-screen when users hold up their smartphones in various locations at various times of the day.

On Sunday afternoon, it was announced on the app's Twitter page that the game is available for download in Canada on Android and iOS devices.

But the app's servers overloaded in the hour after the announcement, and wannabe players had to wait a little longer before they could register an account.

Calgary man killed in air show plane crash

Jeremy Simes
For Metro | Calgary

A Calgary pilot has died after his plane crashed during the Cold Lake Air Show on Sunday afternoon.

Bruce Evans, who was flying a T-28 Trojan aircraft, died after his plane nose-dived during his performance, according to 4 Wing spokesman Matthew Strong.

"4 Wing emergency services responded to the situation immediately and upon securing the scene discovered Mr. Evans was killed as a result of the crash," Strong said in an email. "4 Wing and CFB Cold Lake and the Cold Lake Air Show express our condolences to the family, friends and loved ones of Mr. Evans."

The plane crashed around 2 p.m. on Sunday.

"(It was a) tragic end to an otherwise perfect day," said witness Ken Kimpton.

Evans — a geologist — purchased the T-28 Trojan in 2007 according to the Cold Lake Air Show's website.

Strong said 4 Wing has initiated an investigation into the crash.

"But primarily, we are providing support to Mr. Evans' team and loved ones," Strong said.

'No place for more violence'

Three Baton Rouge officers were killed in a shooting less than two weeks after a black man was fatally shot in a confrontation that sparked protests.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Three Baton Rouge law enforcement officers investigating a report of a man with an assault rifle were killed Sunday, less than two weeks after a black man was fatally shot by police here in a confrontation that sparked nightly protests that reverberated nationwide.

Three other officers were wounded, one critically. Police said the gunman was killed at the scene. Although he was believed to be the only person who fired at officers, authorities said they were unsure whether he had some kind of help.

"We are not ready to say he acted alone," state police spokesman Major Doug Cain said. Two "persons of interests" were detained in the nearby town of Addis.

A witness described the gunman as wearing all black and carrying extra clips of ammunition. He was identified as Gavin Long of Kansas City, said East Baton Rouge Parish Mayor-President Kip Holden.

The 29-year-old black man served in the Marines from 2005 to 2010, reaching the rank of sergeant. He deployed to Iraq from June 2008 to January 2009, according to military records.

Long was awarded several medals, including one for good conduct, and received an honourable discharge.

The University of Alabama issued a statement saying that Long attended classes for one semester in the spring of 2012. A school spokesman said university police had no interactions with him.

It was the fourth high-profile deadly encounter in the United States involving police over the past two weeks. In all, the violence has cost the lives of eight officers, including those in Baton Rouge, and two civilians and sparked a national debate over race and policing.

Authorities initially believed that additional assailants might be at large, but hours later said there were no other active shooters on the loose.

"There simply is no place for more violence," Gov. John Bel Edwards said. "It doesn't further the conversation. It doesn't address any injustice perceived or real."

Of the two officers who survived the shooting, one was hospitalized in critical condition, and the other was in fair condition. Another officer was being treated for non-life-threatening injuries, hospital officials said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MESSAGE

Just days before he was shot and killed Sunday morning, a Baton Rouge police officer posted an emotional Facebook message saying he was "physically and emotionally" tired.

He expressed how difficult it was to be both a police officer and a black man, a friend said. "I swear to God I love this city but I wonder if this city loves me," Montrell Jackson wrote.

REPUBLICANS

Tensions high before convention

The day before the Republican National Convention got underway in Cleveland, the fatal shooting of three police officers in Louisiana on Sunday added new concerns about security as huge crowds were expected to protest and the city police chief prepared officers to deal with the open carrying of weapons as allowed by state law.

Republican Ohio Gov. John Kasich rebuffed a request by the head of the Cleveland police union to suspend that law during the convention, saying he doesn't have the authority to "arbitrarily" alter laws and constitutional rights.

Authorities say three officers were killed in Baton Rouge, La., and three more injured in a shooting less than one mile from local police headquarters.

Sunday afternoon, hundreds of people lined a bridge leading into downtown Cleveland in a peaceful "Circle the City With Love" rally.

Late Sunday afternoon, a few dozen people began marching in a noisy "Shut Down Trump and the RNC" from east of downtown toward Public Square.

There have long been concerns about violent protests and clashes between those who support the presumptive nominee, Donald Trump, and those who oppose him and his inflammatory rhetoric. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's only 15 minutes on the number 4 bus from Massena square to the gritty St. Roch neighbourhood, where the Rolls Royces and designer sunglasses of Nice's famous waterfront seem more than a world away.

The bus follows the banks of the Paillon river, past Don Bosco High School, a prison and a slaughterhouse before letting passengers off at the gates of a garbage processing facility.

Mohamed Lahouaiej Bouhlel, the man who killed 84 people by driving a 17-tonne truck through a crowd celebrating Bastille Day, lived on the fourth floor of a dingy walk-up building here. His name is misspelled on the intercom.

Unlike Rio de Janeiro, where the impoverished favelas are on the hills, here luxury condos loom over the poor neighbourhood. It's a constant reminder of the wealth the people who live here are missing out on.

Like many of France's infamous banlieues, St. Roch is populated largely by North African immigrants and their children, and has disproportionately high unemployment and crime.

At Chez Elies, a local kebab shop, a group of men hang out drinking coffee and Fanta, rolling cigarettes and listening to music through the open door of a parked car. Each one of them knew Bouhlel by sight, but said he wasn't one to stop and chat — a practice common in the tightly knit neighbourhood.

"He was a loner. He drank his Kronenbourg (a local beer) alone in the park right across the street," said Wissem Addali, 38, who immigrated to France 20 years ago from the same region of Tunisia as Bouhlel.

Nice is one of France's biggest terrorist recruiting hubs. More than 50 locals have departed to fight in the Middle East, according to the Economist.

Authorities said Bouhlel "radicalized very quickly" and have found two text messages sent in the moments before the attack that seem to suggest he had accomplices.

CCTV footage reportedly shows Bouhlel twice scouting the Promenade des Anglais, where he carried out his mass murder. French television station BFM reported that he drove slowly down the boulevard on Tuesday and Wednesday.

After tracing Bouhlel's texts and phone calls, police arrested an Albanian couple Sunday, local press reported, bringing the total to seven.

Bouhlel's ex-wife, who was held for 48 hours, was released Sunday. Reporters who knocked at her 12th-storey apartment were rebuffed.

She was well known in the area as well, said Walid, 30, who wore an electronic monitor on his ankle and didn't want to give his last name out of fear it might impact his criminal proceedings.

FAILED COUP

Turkey crackdown a concern

Following a failed coup against Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, the government moved swiftly Sunday to shore up his power and remove those perceived as an enemy, saying it has detained 6,000 people.

The crackdown targeted not only generals and soldiers, but a wide swath of the judiciary that has sometimes blocked Erdogan, raising concerns that the effort to oust him will push Turkey even further into authoritarian rule.

Friday night's sudden uprising by a faction of the military appeared to take the government — and the world — by surprise.

The plotters sent warplanes firing on key government installations and tanks rolling into major cities, but it ended hours later when loyal government forces regained control of the military, and civilians took to the streets in support of Erdogan. At least 294 people were killed and more than 1,400 wounded, the government said.

On Sunday, Prime Minister Binali Yildirim said the coup had failed and life has returned to normal. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

URBAN ETIQUETTE ELLEN VANSTONE

THE QUESTION

Which is grammatically correct: 'between you and me' or 'between you and I'? My grandmother seems pretty convinced that it's the latter.

Dead Ellen,

A woman at work told me that "between you and I" is wrong and I should say "between you and me," but my grandmother in Guelph taught me to always say "you and I" because that is more polite. What do you think?

Signed,
T.S., Toronto

Dear T.S.,

A link went around on Facebook recently, citing a University of Michigan study that indicated that sticklers for proper grammar aren't as "nice" as other people. I think we can all agree that I would never claim to be nice as I dispense my tart but brilliant advice to readers such as yourself. But I have laid off correcting people's grammar over the years, for several reasons.

Firstly, language is an ever-changing beast and it's often pointless to cling to old rules. Much as we hate to see language manglers confuse "comprise" with "compose" or "continual" with "continuous," we have also gained helpful new usages, such as the wonderfully sarcastic "I could care less" and the increased use of the non-binary "they" instead of "he" or "he/she" as a singular pronoun.

Secondly, as long as people are expressing themselves clearly, there's no need to snobbishly squelch them mid-communiqué with dribbling excretions from your own, supposedly better-educated brain.

I'm guessing your grandmother's labouring under the commonly held belief that if something sounds awkward, then it's probably correct.

The only time I will weigh in is with children in my care, because proper grammar is a tool like any other you want to put in their arsenal, to use as they see fit, as they head out into the world; and with pompous know-it-alls and poseurs, people who affect what they think is good grammar in a bid to appear more polite or better educated, but who are in fact merely rigid, pretentious and egregiously wrong.

I'm sorry to say that your grandmother may fall into the latter category. Of course I don't know the woman, and after writing this column, I doubt I'll ever be given the pleasure of an introduction. But I'm guessing she is labouring under the commonly held belief that if something sounds a bit awkward, then it's probably more correct. Fie on that misconception. I'd much rather hear speakers say "me and her went to the store" than "I went to the store with she, and I walked between she and the road."

The first example is wrong (because you'd never say "me went to the store" or "her went to the store). But the second example, also wrong, seems even worse because it clangs on the ear whether you know proper grammar or not. When in doubt, go with the vernacular, rather than put on airs with awkward constructions that you're unsure of.

Which brings us back to your grandmother. I applaud her for trying to make you sound more polite, but I must insist you think more critically next time anyone insists you follow a rule without justifying the reasons behind it. She didn't have the Internet. You do. If you really care about proper grammar, start getting into the habit of looking things up.

What's the worst that can happen?

Three more police officers have been killed, evidently by another man with a big gun, this time in Baton Rouge, La. As of this writing, details are scarce, but no one can help but assume that this, like the attack in Dallas, was a vicious, misguided act of revenge.

Today, the Republican convention begins in Cleveland. The party will nominate Donald Trump as its presidential candidate and it will present a platform shot through with the white Christian nationalism that Trump has loudly championed on the trail.

The violence in Baton Rouge and Dallas — not to mention Minneapolis, Nice and Turkey — gives Trump, whose campaign had been flagging prior to the recent violence, a fresh opportunity to offer fascist consolations, a new context in which to rail against the enemies who threaten the country, to vow to make these enemies pay, and to personally ensure that his supporters' lost glory will be restored.

"Trump has lent his party ... a prompt to conservatives, to feel themselves unconstrained," Benjamin Wallace-Wells of the New Yorker wrote Sunday.

The head of Cleveland's police union, having contemplated the prospect of unconstrained-feeling conservatives assembling in his city, plans to petition Ohio governor John Kasich to suspend the state's open-carry gun laws during the convention. The irony behind the request is dark even by summer 2016 standards: The police can ban tennis balls from the convention protest zone but, because Ohioans are constitutionally empowered to brandish rifles, they can't ban guns.

A lot of people have lately been talking about the 1968 Democratic convention in Chicago, where the police attacked antiwar protesters with clubs and tear gas for nights on end. You've heard the story told: the anti-Vietnam War movement had reached its apotheosis, Martin Luther King and Robert Kennedy had been assassinated, and the Newark and Detroit race riots were recent, vivid memories. The parallels to 2016 are easy to spot if you're looking for them.

The '68 riots are central to 20th-century American political folklore. They're invoked gravely but with a certain fondness: A needed reckoning, a necessary exercise. Some eggs got cracked but the omelette got made.

At the other 1968 convention, the Republicans nominated Richard Nixon. No riots. Here's what one of his top advisers, John Erlichman, said, in 1994, about what happened next:

"The Nixon campaign in 1968, and the Nixon White House after that, had two enemies: the antiwar left and black people … By getting the public to associate the hippies with marijuana and blacks with heroin, and then criminalizing both heavily, we could disrupt those communities. … Did we know we were lying? Of course we did."

Call it a program of conservatives who felt themselves constrained.

"A lot of subtext is going to become text in the next few days," wrote Tommy Craggs, of Slate, the day after the Dallas shooting.

Is that the worst that can happen?

Flexing that side hustle muscle

TREND

Precarious job situation has many working extra gigs

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

After a long day at work Ashley Mckee heads home to flex her side hustle muscle.

The 31-year-old Torontonian makes adult Sailor Moon outfits and sells them on Facebook, a gig she estimates brings in about $800 a month on top of what she earns in her full-time position at a mascot manufacturer.

"My nine-to-five job covers all the bills and everything but there's very little left over for fun stuff," she said.

"I thought I could make a little bit extra on the side turning my hobby into an extra little job."

Mckee is one of many millennials turning to side hustle in an increasingly uncertain job market as the cost of living in cities continues to climb.

Covering everything from teaching English over Skype to driving an Uber, the term has even found it's way into Urban Dictionary, where it's defined as "sideline that brings in cash."

Andrew Cash, cofounder of the Urban Worker Project, which advocates for young workers, said while many may enjoy the flexibility a side job can bring, it's important to put the trend in context.

"The underlying sort of motive and motivation for most people here is just that they're just not covering their bills," he said.

Younger workers can find it hard to make ends meet faced with sky-high rents in cities and record levels of student debt, coupled with a job market full of temporary, part-time jobs, he said.

Recent Ryerson University grad Yaïza Décaudin has two side gigs on top of her part-time position at a bakery, freelance graphic design and tutoring. They make up one full-time job "in terms of time, but not money," she said with a laugh. While the 22-year-old enjoys the freedom the arrangement gives her to travel, it leaves her without benefits.

For Cash there's no "silver bullet" to the underlying problem, but it's something all levels of government and industry need to take very seriously. "Work really has changed, but wasn't hasn't changed is the need for workers to have stable, predictable jobs in communities where they can afford to start a life," he said.

FIVE WAYS TO MAKE SOME EXTRA CASH

Young adults across the country are hustling hard to make ends meet — on top of their regular jobs. Here are five ways almost anyone can turn their hard work and creativity into a little extra cash.
GENNA BUCK/METRO CANADA

1 Tap your talents

Can you knit? Make meringues? Chances are you can find people who would love to tap into your skill set. That's what 23-year-old Niloufar Fayaz, who loves baking, decided to do when she found herself between administrative jobs. While she looks for a job, Fayaz has been teaching others to make macarons in her Toronto kitchen for $90 per three-hour workshop.

2 Go shopping

Mystery shopping is a part-time market research gig where you pose as a customer at a business then fill out a questionnaire evaluating their level of service. Mystery shoppers get a small fee, typically $10-20, and often get to keep what they buy. But beware of scammers: Real mystery shopping companies never pay in advance and don't ask you to send your money anywhere.

3 Share your opinion

If you're in a demographic they're interested in, many companies pay cash or gift cards for your opinion on anything from the taste of beer to your experience with medical treatments. In-person groups, which are held in cities around the country, usually pay the best. And again, be wary of scammers: You shouldn't have to pay to sign up with a reputable company.

4 Be a wallflower

Those people who stand around looking cool in the background of a music video — or concerned, in the case of a police procedural — are often casual workers paid a day rate for a long shift on a movie or TV set. This side hustle often comes with meals and is especially popular in film industry hotspots like Vancouver.

5 Ride your bike

Package-delivery companies and sharing-economy start-ups like Uber Eats regularly hire bike couriers on a contract or casual basis. Erik Smith, 22, a recent graduate of Humber College's Comedy Writing and Performance program, said he makes $100 on a really good day delivering take-out meals by bike in Toronto.

OITNB draws ire of veterans' groups

Leading veterans' groups are disturbed by the way veterans hired as prison guards are portrayed in the new season of the Netflix series, Orange is the New Black.

The veterans' groups say they take issue with the way the new guards disparage the inmates throughout season four of the drama that takes place in a women's prison and the way they talk about their combat experiences.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars called the show "offensive." Iraq And Afghanistan Veterans Of America said it will further stigmatize veterans, and Disabled American Veterans said the show is out of the touch with the reality of the veteran experience.

Netflix didn't respond to multiple messages left Thursday and Friday seeking comment.

In one scene in the finale, a guard tells another guard about innocent people he killed in Afghanistan. That's egregious, and just one way veterans are misrepresented, said Dan Clare, the national spokesman for DAV and an Iraq War veteran.

The danger, Clare said, is that Orange is the New Black is a popular show airing at a time when many service members are returning home and looking for jobs.

VFW national commander John A. Biedrzycki Jr. said the show's writers and producers chose to offend all veterans because they needed new villains. He spoke out Thursday, after a 27-year-old Air Force veteran, Tahlia Burton, wrote an opinion piece about the show for a military news and culture website, Task & Purpose.

WHY I LIKE MY JOB

Remi Ejiwunmi, 45, Midwife with Midwifery Care of Peel and Halton Hills (Greater Toronto Area)

As a midwife, I provide comprehensive prenatal care to women while promoting healthy lifestyles that benefit both mother and child. I attend to women in labour and birth, and assist new moms with postpartum recovery and newborn baby care. I also provide checkups, ultrasounds and general counsel to optimize each client's birthing experience.

I started practising when I was 25 years old, after achieving a bachelor of science in psychology and bachelor of health sciences at McMaster University. I earned a position with my current practice right after graduation, and have continued to grow and learn professionally since 1996. I also completed my master of science in quality improvement and patient safety from the University of Toronto to gain additional skills.

I enjoy getting to know my clients and their families over the course of their pregnancies and beyond. Midwifery is unique in that it encourages clients to become actively involved in their own care — so it's rewarding to see my patients discover their strengths throughout that process of active involvement and then use those strengths on their journey through parenthood.

THE BASICS: Midwife

$72,000

Median annual salary for experienced midwives. Those well into their careers can earn upwards of $90,000 per year.

+14%

The amount of growth expected in this field over the next 8 years.

Data for this feature was provided by payscale.com, service-canada.gc.ca, statcan.gc.ca and onetonline.org.

HOW TO START

Midwives are the only health-care professionals specifically trained in out-of-hospital birth. The typical path for a registered midwife involves obtainment of a bachelor's degree in midwifery followed by the successful completion of the national board exam.

There are seven recognized midwifery programs available in Canada, and each province regulates midwifery differently. In most provinces, newly registered midwives must complete a one-year mentorship under the guidance of an experienced midwife.

WHERE YOU CAN GO

According to Statistics Canada, the nation has experienced an average increase of 3,110 births per year since 2011 (totalling an estimated 388,729 in 2015). A rising birth rate and population means there is a greater demand for registered midwives.

Midwives typically serve as primary caregivers to pregnant, birthing and postpartum women and their babies for the first six weeks of life in patient homes or birth centres. Additionally, most midwives are able to admit and discharge patients in local hospitals as needed. Midwives are also increasingly filling administrative and policy roles within the government, in education as faculty, and in policy roles with health care organizations.

JOHANNA SCHNELLER WHAT I'M WATCHING

With any luck, we just hit peak antihero onscreen

THE SHOW: Vice Principals, Season 1, Episode 3 (HBO)
THE MOMENT: The vicious insults

Behold a couple of antiheroes: Danny McBride is Neal and Walton Goggins is Lee in Vice Principals. CONTRIBUTED

U.S. high school vice-principals Neal (Danny McBride), a relentless boor, and Lee (Walton Goggins), a smarmy liar, can't stand each other. But they hate their new principal, Dr. Belinda Brown (Kimberly Hebert Gregory) more. They've formed an uneasy alliance to ruin her life. Now, standing outside by the school flagpole, they watch her exit her car.

"Look at her, like a f—in' dinosaur," Lee sneers. With each of her steps toward them, he mocks her weight, "Boom, boom, boom. I can see the edge of her f—in' Spanx. Look at that ass."

"Ugh," Neal says.

"I bet when she gets up here she smells like f—ed buttholes," Lee says.

Yuck, on every level. I understand the concept of the loathsome loser. I get that "anti-hero" is the kind of hero TV loves best now. But I fervently hope this show proves that we've hit Peak Antihero — or rather, Nadir Antihero.

It's one thing to watch a character who's terribly flawed — who's lonely, divorced and in debt, who doesn't know how to function, who says all the wrong things all the time — as Neal is. But it's another if they're purely asinine. Neal can't get through a single scene without some sort of viciousness, ugliness or stupidity (and often all three). It's soul-crushing.

Maybe Neal will learn and grow. Maybe show creators McBride and Jody Hill are doing a trenchant sendup of the frustration that formerly privileged white men feel when society no longer values them.

I don't care. They lost me at "butthole."

Stenson wins first major with record-tying final round

Henrik Stenson is the champion golfer of the year, thanks to a final round for the ages.

He kept hitting the best shots of his life, one after another, and he needed each one to stay ahead of Phil Mickelson in a British Open duel that ranked among the best in major championship history.

Stenson made 10 birdies, including a 50-foot putt across the 15th green that had him pumping his fist in a rare show of emotion Sunday.

The final stroke in this masterpiece was a 20-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole that curled into the cup on the final turn. It gave him an 8-under 63, tying Johnny Miller at Oakmont for the greatest closing round by a major champion, and Stenson didn't even realize it until he sat down to sign his card.

Records didn't matter. This was about winning his first major.

"Right now I'm running on adrenaline. But there will be some point when I'll struggle to make it up the stairs when I get back to the house," Stenson said after four hours of an epic battle between two 40-somethings at Royal Troon.

Mickelson was a runner-up for the 11th time in a major, but never like this. He can't look back at a mistake because he really didn't make any. He opened with a 63, closed with a career-best 65, shot the second-best score in Open history and was 11 shots better than everyone in the field.

Except one.

"It's probably the best I've played and not won," Mickelson said. "I think that's probably why it's disappointing in that I don't have a point where I can look back and say, 'I should have done that or had I only done this.' I played a bogey-free round of 65 on the final round of a major. Usually, that's good enough to do it, and I got beat. I got beat by 10 birdies."

He got beat by arguably the best final round in 156 years of major championships.

Miller also made 10 birdies in his final round of the 1973 U.S. Open, and then waited to see if anyone could catch him. Stenson pulled away with birdies on the 14th and 15th holes, and then a third in a row after Mickelson drilled a 3-wood onto the green at the par-5 16th and came within a fraction of an inch of making an eagle.

The last birdie was for the record book.

Stenson finished at 264, breaking by one shot the 72-hole scoring record in the majors that David Toms set in the 2001 PGA Championship at Atlanta Athletic Club. His 20-under par matched Jason Day's record for lowest under par at last year's PGA Championship. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

I knew that he would ultimately come through and win. I'm happy that he did. I'm disappointed that it was at my expense.

Yankees' win comes at Price's expense

Masahiro Tanaka outpitched David Price in their first match-up to win his fourth-straight decision, and the New York Yankees ended Boston's six-game winning streak Sunday night with a 3-1 victory over the Red Sox.

Starlin Castro keyed New York's three-run fourth inning with an RBI double that scored Didi Gregorius from first base. No. 9 batter Austin Romine and Jacoby Ellsbury each added a run-scoring single with two outs off Price, who gave up 11 hits in 5-2/3 innings as the Yankees prevented a three-game sweep.

Price (9-7) had only one strikeout following three consecutive outings with 10.

Tanaka (7-2) fanned seven with one walk over six innings of three-hit ball.
